Description

Alpine: The Brand's Origins

Automobiles Alpine began as a small French sports-car maker founded by Jean Rédélé in 1955. It gained fame in rallying and lightweight sports cars, most famously with the Alpine A110 in the 1960s and early 1970s, establishing Alpine's reputation for sporting excellence. Renault gradually took control of Alpine through the late 1960s and early 1970s, fully integrating the brand into its sports programme.

The Dieppe, France factory became the spiritual home of Alpine — and later of many Renault performance models — and the Alpine badge came to represent French sports-car engineering and flair.

Alpine in the Late 1980s → Early 1990s

By the mid-1980s, Alpine's focus had shifted from rally racers like the A310 to more road-focused sports cars — mid-engine grand tourers that could compete with established European rivals. This was the era of the Alpine GTA.
